Exploring Teaching and Learning Strategies in the 21st Century

Teaching and learning has evolved a lot with continuous research and education. As teaching and learning become more complex with changing times, teachers, parents and caregivers are seeking new ways of addressing individual and group learning needs. They use different strategies including technology which is penetrating most aspects of learning and culture. Teachers appreciate the fact that learners are experiencing new challenges, with a need to rethink teaching and learning strategies.

This workshop focuses on identification of learning needs, styles and designating teaching strategies that address learners' needs. The strategies also focus on understanding and meeting the teachers' needs on how to make teaching and learning interactive, engaging, and recognising both the learner and educator as equal partners in education. Come learn with us to unleash your teaching and learning potential and you help learners exploit their potentials. BE A NO LIMIT, HAPPY AND MOTIVATED TEACHER!

About the Facilitators

Dr John Ouma Onala (PhD early intervention for children with autistic spectrum disorder), is a leading consultant in education, developmental disabilities and biocelulla analysis at First Steps Interventions, and the chairperson of SEP.

Lilian Agesa is a trained special needs teacher (B.ED) with a minor in English and literature. She has taught early years and children with learning difficulties in the area of literacy since 2012. Believing in inclusive approaches to teaching, her passion in teaching literacy and numeracy to learners has seen her gain more interest in training other teachers and collaborating to make learning a worth experience to both teachers and students.
